How Construction Work Has a Personal Impact on ME

One government impact for me would be the fact that there is ongoing construction in our neighborhood and I must take a detour that takes twice as long to get my son to his football practice.

This situation connects directly our course because it's a state level government and public groundwork. The construction is part of the Texas Department of transportation which is responsible for improving and maintaining our roads and transportation system. The state uses its fundings that they receive from the federal government to improve our roads and transportation. The local government also plays a part here because they are responsible for the traffic flow and putting out those detour signs that make me roll my eyes every day.

This ties to what we are learning in class because it is about how the government is taking care of roads and construction projects, and it's done through federalism (different levels of government collaboration).

To me, the impact is mixed because I do appreciate that the government is trying to improve our roads, but then again, I'm always late because I must leave as soon as I get off work to take him, I can't leave any earlier. Football season won't last all year, but I'm sure this construction will last a very, very long time.
